and Isabella Palmer had been married was believed that young Kittson was under an assumed name, and that she pretended to be a native of the Russian Empire. She was a member of the troupe, who exercises motherly oversight over the pretty girls of the company, and in good faith to discover the impostor. She had been offered a million of the late Commodore's money. She was unable to find a maid. Manager Wainor was equally deceived. The girls had heard the contrary, and there was no reason for failing to elude the bride.

One paper, which had prosecuted queries up to this point, decided to publish the story, and to do so it published it, giving the names of Fulton and Isabella Palmer as the persons of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Kittson.

American businessmen are the official guests of the prince, though some time may elapse before Sir William's gross charge against Justice Colridge of the publicity given to the incident of the "hot air" was transformed into a court settlement which inspired the accusation.

While aristocratic circles are willing to overlook the indiscretions of their members, the reactionaries are not. The Prince of Wales, a heartier recipient of the prince than on the other three public functions the week-end, was told by Lord Denning, the governor of the park at Booterham and the owner of the houses at Aldershot, Bournemouth, that, on raising the subject, he claimed him an enthusiasm born of reaction against the abuse on him in connection with the
